The 2016 presidential campaign will likely focus heavily on conflicting perspectives among the candidates as to proper goals of American foreign policy and methodologies for implementing those goals on the world stage.

At our fall kick-off program for the 2015-16 World Affairs Council Anniversary year, we offer members a unique opportunity to discuss foreign policy development with someone who has spent his career researching and writing about it. Dr. Brown is Adjunct Senior Fellow for the American Security Project and Senior Advisor to the Security Studies Program Massachusetts Institute of Technology and over his long career has worked for both the Departments of State and Defense, and several think tanks. He will talk to us about the issues and values behind American policy decisions including those of the Obama administration. We will examine and discuss the outcomes of some of those decisions to predict the viability of those options in tomorrow's world.
