Americans and others in today’s world are facing a myriad of serious problems. Some issues are so serious that comprehensive solutions seem beyond our individual reach. If we all focused on just three issues impacting life in the immediate and medium-term future, what would they likely be? What role should international policy and shared problem-solving play in addressing major global issues?

After a distinguished 35-year foreign service career, Ambassador Linda Thomas-Greenfield is now a Senior Counselor at ASG where she leads the firm's Africa practice. She is also a Distinguished Resident Fellow in African Affairs at the Institute for the Study of Diplomacy at Georgetown University Walsh School of Foreign Service. Her foreign service postings involved varying tasks in five countries, an ambassadorship in Liberia, and a UN Mission. From 2013-2017, she served as U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs. Prior to that appointment, she served as Director General of the Foreign Service and Director of Human Resources, for the U.S. Department of State’s 70,000 member staff.
