How Can We Counter Social Media's Powers of Persuasion in the Mideast and America?

Western observers marveled at the power of social media to mobilize young protesters during the Middle East's "Arab Spring". When democracy didn't result, many Americans lost interest. Meanwhile social media became a prime recruiting and organizational tool for terrorists and extremists in the Middle East.

A former senior advisor to three U.S. Secretaries of State, with a special portfolio on digital transmedia strategy and countering violent extremism, Haroon K. Ullah is an award-winning author and Peabody TV Award recipient, an Adjunct Professor at Georgetown University, and a term member of the Council on Foreign Relations.
